The Art of Navigation

The birth of the art of navigation is said to have taken place around 3500 B.C. The first navigators stayed close to shore. When they did venture out of sight of land, the navigator was able to determine his latitude by observing the height of the sun during the day and the North Star at night. Since time was measured with a sandglass and speed was estimated by watching pieces of seaweed pass by the hull, these early calculations were often way off. The mariner's compass, an early form of the magnetic compass was initially used only when the weather obscured the sun or the North Star, these first compasses were very crude. Mariners soon began keeping detailed records of their voyages that land-based mapmakers used to create the first nautical charts called Portolan Charts. James Cook used the seagoing chronometer to circumvent the globe and when he returned in 1779 his calculations of longitude based upon the chronometer proved correct to within 8 miles. Cook completed such accurate and detailed charts during his voyage that he changed the nature of navigation forever and charts were rapidly developed around the world.

Today's cruise ships are equipped with high tech devices. GPS (Global Positioning System), multiple navigation radars, echo sounders, adaptive self-tuning autopilot, fiber-optic gyro heading reference systems, Doppler speed logs, and electronic chart displays... these are just some of the equipment you will find on the bridge. But the ancient art of navigation still has its place alongside them as savvy sailors often maintain a sextant, chronometer and an almanac at hand.
